ABSTRACT

The level of digitalisation of justice in Estonia remains among the highest in the EU. Following the amendments of the Courts Act from 2023, all district courts have created at least two specialised departments, civil and criminal. There have been no cases of de facto transfers of judges. The judiciary initiated a reform of the Council for the Administration of Courts that would transfer more powers from the executive to the judiciary. A new law lowered the indexation of salaries for nearly all civil servants, including judges. The measure seems to be of a general nature and is limited in time, while a constitutional review is about to be requested. The high workload and the diminishing attractiveness of the judicial profession were identified as challenges by stakeholders. At the same time courts continue to deal efficiently with incoming cases.

The implementation of the 2021-2025 Anti-Corruption Action Plan continues in a timely and efficient manner. Legislative efforts are ongoing to improve the investigation and prosecution of financial crimes, including corruption. Investigation and prosecution of corruption cases are carried out efficiently and investigations regarding high-level corruption are still ongoing. The guidelines on conflicts of interest are being implemented successfully, but there are currently no plans to introduce a related enforcement mechanism. Digital tools are being developed and deployed to ensure better implementation of the existing rules on integrity. The guidelines on lobbying continue being implemented with success, while discussions on introducing lobbying rules in Parliament have been initiated. Political party financing remains a high-risk area for corruption, and the adoption of the draft law aiming at strengthening the powers of the Political Parties' Financing Surveillance Committee is a priority for the government. Rules on revolving doors are being implemented and additional guidance in this regard is expected. New legislation on whistleblower protection was adopted. Healthcare, local government, political party financing, public procurement, as well as residence and work permits are considered to be at high risk of corruption.

The national media regulator in Estonia has remained independent. The Government is assessing the need to introduce amendments to the existing media legislation concerning, for example, licensing of radio channels. A legislative reform aimed to guarantee better financial stability and political independence of the public service media is being prepared. The Ministry of Justice is working on an analysis regarding the strengthening of the right of access to documents guaranteed in the Public Information Act and in the meantime, the Information System Authority has made public information with unrestricted access proactively available online. The protection of journalists remains stable, although possible legal actions by politicians and business owners have been referred to as a growing risk.

Frequent use of procedures allowing for substantial delays to the legislative process in Parliament have triggered a reaction, resulting in the Government using the accelerated legislative workflows more often. A draft reform envisages more financial autonomy for the Chancellor of Justice. The practice of allocation of funding to Civil Society Organisations through Parliament without concrete criteria has been discontinued.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, Estonia has made:

- Some further progress on ensuring that the guidelines on the conflict of interests are subject to an enforcement mechanism.
- Some further progress on efforts to ensure consistent and effective implementation of the right of access to information, taking into account European standards on access to official documents.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to Estonia to:

- Continue the efforts to reform the Council for the Administration of Courts, taking into account European Standards on councils for the judiciary.
- Advance with the efforts to ensure consistent and effective implementation of the right of access to information taking into account European standards on access to official documents.
- Ensure effective public consultation in the context of the legislative process.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

The Estonian court system consists of three levels: four County Courts (hearing all civil, criminal and misdemeanour matters) and two Administrative Courts at first instance, two Circuit Courts at second instance (reviewing decisions of County and Administrative Courts), and the Supreme Court at the highest instance, which reviews court judgments by way of cassation proceedings. The Supreme Court administers its own budget and operations, while the courts of first and second instance are administered in cooperation between the Council for Administration of Courts and the Ministry of Justice. Estonia does not have a Constitutional court but the Supreme Court's Constitutional Review Chamber can carry out ex post constitutional review, including, under certain conditions, based on a constitutional complaint¹. The Council for Administration of Courts is a non-permanent body², which has powers, among others, related to the judicial map, the resources of the judiciary and participates in the discussion on administration of the courts. Judges of first and second instance courts are appointed by the President of the Republic on the proposal of the Supreme Court (en banc)³. The Prosecutor's Office is a government agency under the Ministry of Justice, which is independent in the performance of its duties. It is managed by the Prosecutor General, particularly as regards the appointment and career of prosecutors⁴. The Estonian Bar Association is an independent, self-governing professional association⁵. Estonia participates in the European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO).

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Estonia continues to be high among the general public and average among companies. Overall, 67% of the general population and 58% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be 'fairly or very good' in 2024⁶. The perceived judicial independence among the general public has increased in comparison with 2023 (65%), as well as with 2020 (57%). The perceived judicial independence among companies has slightly decreased in comparison with 2023 (59%), although it remains higher than 2020 (39%)⁷.

All courts have created at least two specialised departments, civil and criminal, and concerns about possible de facto transfers of judges have not materialised. As mentioned in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, amendments to the Courts Act entered into force as of 1 March 2023⁸. With these amendments, the territorial divisions of courts at national level were abolished and converted into specialised civil and criminal departments. These specialised departments are headed by a judge, who is appointed by the president of the court after having heard the opinion of the judges of the given department⁹. The objectives of the reform were to balance the workload among judges from different courts and court houses, and to harmonise the case-law¹⁰. In implementing the reform, all courts created at least two specialised departments, civil and criminal¹¹. The creation of additional departments can take place only after the approval of the common assembly of a court¹². As regards the fulfilment of the objectives of the reform, the Government informed that the workload is being redistributed to better balance it among courts. As to the harmonisation of case law, it is still premature to report on any results at this stage¹³. Stakeholders reported that there is already an increased sharing of information among district courts which would lead to the desired results¹⁴. However, there has been no easing of the workload of individual judges which could be attributed to the effects of the reform¹⁵. A concern flagged in the 2023 Report¹⁶ was that the new amendments and related specialisation of departments could result in a de facto transfer of judges without their consent, but this concern did not materialise¹⁷. The law contains specific safeguards for the transfer of judges, namely that the transfer of a judge from one department to another is done only following an application of a judge, which is then decided upon by the president of the court after having heard the opinion of the full court¹⁸. It is recalled that according to European standards, specialisation of courts could present certain advantages¹⁹ but also certain disadvantages²⁰, and both have to be duly taken into account, having in mind the specificities of each individual Member State.

The judiciary initiated a reform of the Council for the Administration of Courts that would transfer more powers from the executive to the judiciary. On 5 February 2024, the Ministry of Justice published a legislative intent²¹ outlining the ideas for a reform of the judiciary. The intent was developed within a working group set up by the President of the Supreme Court and in cooperation with stakeholders²². It envisages a reform of the Council for the Administration of Courts and a transfer of powers from the executive to the judiciary. The main objectives of the proposed reform are to increase the accountability and decision-making power of courts in the development and administration of courts, to strengthen the independence of the judiciary from the executive, to reduce the dispersion of responsibilities regarding the administration of courts, and to ensure a coherent and uniformly high-quality judicial administration service for all courts. There are no concrete draft amendments proposed yet, as the legislative intent will first be discussed with the Government and only then tabled at Parliament. As regards councils of the judiciary, it is recalled there are European standards for such bodies concerning their composition and their functioning in order to ensure their independence²³.

Quality

The level of digitalisation remains among the highest in the EU with a regulation on paper free proceedings being implemented. A regulation concerning paper free court proceedings in civil and administrative cases, which entered into force in April 2023 is being successfully implemented²⁴. It provides a clear legal value to the digital court file in order to facilitate the digitalisation of court proceedings and the transition to paperless court proceedings²⁵. The Estonian justice system is very advanced in offering a variety of digital solutions to conduct and follow court proceedings. These include, among others, the possibility for defendants to submit written statements online, including legal aid applications, for defendants in detention to use ICT facilities to prepare for hearings, and for victims to access their ongoing case electronically and to submit written statements online²⁶.

²⁰ For example, specialisation, could lead to reproducing previous decisions when deciding on same issues, which can hamper the evolution of case-law in line with society's needs. Furthermore, smaller courts may find it impossible to set up specialist chambers, or an adequate number of such chambers. This forces judges to be versatile, and thus to have the ability to address a range of specialist matters. See Opinion (2012) No. 15 of the Consultative Council of European Judges on the specialisation of judges, paras. 14 to 23.

²⁵ The regulation does not require to print out both electronic documents created by the court itself and those sent to the court, as well as data already stored in the information system, for the paper file. This was a requirement under the previous procedural rules, which did not take into account the high level of digitalisation.

A new law lowered the indexation of salaries for nearly all civil servants, including judges. In December 2023, the Parliament adopted a law that cut in half the indexation of salaries for most civil servants and froze the indexation for the next four years²⁷. The cut was deemed necessary to cope with the economic difficulties facing the country. After the end of the four-year period, a raise in salaries has been promised to compensate for this cut²⁸. Furthermore, the cut of indexation is affecting salaries of civil servants across the board, including salaries of almost all judges²⁹. Only salaries linked to the highest civil servant salary index, which is determined by the average national salary increase and the increase in the cost of living are exempted³⁰. Stakeholders have explained that in 2019, judges had agreed to forfeit some benefits in exchange for having a stable yearly indexation of their salaries³¹. However, this is now being changed by freezing the indexation of salaries for the next four years, and the Estonian Judges Association have approached the Chancellor of Justice to cooperate on a possible challenge of the law before the Constitutional review Chamber of the Supreme Court, arguing that the new law affects judicial independence³². It is recalled that according to European standards, judges' remuneration should be commensurate with their profession and responsibilities and be sufficient to shield them from inducement aimed at influencing their decisions³³. In that respect it is relevant that the new measure seems to be of a general nature, having a broader scope affecting not only judges but nearly all civil servants, and it is also limited in time.

The high workload and the diminishing attractiveness of the judicial profession have been identified as challenges by stakeholders. On 10 October 2023, the President of the Supreme Court gave an overview of the functioning of the judicial system before Parliament and identified the high workload and the difficulty in attracting young talent as main concerns³⁴. The Ministry of Justice informed that there is a constant monitoring of the workload of judges, and the Supreme Court confirmed that there is a continuous increase in the workload at first and second instance courts³⁵. There is a common understanding among stakeholders that the issue with the high workload is related to the procedural rules³⁶. For this reason, in December 2023, the President of the Supreme Court established a working group to prepare draft amendments that would determine and address the concerns related to the procedural rules that judges have³⁷. It is expected that the first draft amendments would reach Parliament in September 2024³⁸. According to the Ministry of Justice, the recently adopted reform on the specialisation of the courts could balance the workload, while a change in the procedural rules would help reduce it³⁹. As regards the challenge of attracting young talent to the judiciary, there have been some steps taken by the executive to tackle this issue⁴⁰, and some initiatives have been taken by the Supreme Court in this respect⁴¹.

The impact of the new legal aid rules to increase the participation of legal aid providers remains to be observed. As mentioned in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Minister of Justice amended the regulation to increase the legal aid fees for lawyers⁴². Despite this increase, the impact of the new rules remains to be observed. Stakeholders have reported that the situation has not changed, with very few lawyers participating in the legal aid scheme⁴³. However, the legal fees received by a defence lawyer in a specific criminal case seem to be above the EU average⁴⁴. In relation to lawyers and legal aid providers, it should be noted that there was a case before the Supreme Court regarding the methodology of evaluation of exams used by the Estonian Bar, which suspended the exams for entering the Bar⁴⁵. The Supreme Court found that the rules of procedure of the Estonian Bar Association, including the organisation of the bar exam, do not contradict the Bar Association Act. As a result, the exam dates have now been restored, and the next exam dates have been published on the website of the Bar Council⁴⁶.

Efficiency

The courts continue to deal efficiently with incoming cases despite some increases in length of proceedings. According to the 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard, the length of proceedings in disposition time for 2022 continues to be among the shortest in the EU⁴⁷. For

At least once a year, the prospective judicial candidates training program is organised; and the draft act of the Courts Act has been in progress regarding the requirements of evaluation of judges' professional performance, partial work-load and restrictions on holding office. The draft act aims to support the professional development of judges and to modernise the judiciary.

2023, the length of proceedings in days on average for civil cases was with a similar efficiency as in previous years in county courts⁴⁸. In criminal cases the efficiency has slightly decreased in comparison to 2022⁴⁹. In the first instance courts, the length of administrative cases continued to increase⁵⁰. The length of court proceedings in civil, commercial and administrative cases is among the shortest in the EU (measured in disposition time) and the number of pending cases is lower than average in the EU. Compared to 2022, the clearance rate remained stable at 100%; this means that courts continue to be able to cope with incoming cases⁵¹.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

The Ministry of Justice is in charge of the preparation, oversight and coordination of the anti-corruption Action Plan 2021-2025. The Anti-Corruption Select Committee exercises parliamentary scrutiny over the implementation of anti-corruption measures. The Political Parties' Financing Surveillance Committee oversees political parties' funding. The Corruption Crimes' Office of the National Criminal Police is a specialised unit responsible for carrying out investigations on corruption cases, and the Internal Security Service is responsible for investigating corruption offences committed by higher state officials and higher local government officials in six larger municipalities. The Prosecutor's Office supervises and directs pre-trial criminal investigation proceedings on corruption offences and represents the public prosecution in courts.

The perception among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively low. In the 2023 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Estonia scores 76/100 and ranks 8th in the European Union and 12th globally⁵². This perception has been relatively stable over the past five years⁵³. The 2024 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 51% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 68%) and 21% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 27%)⁵⁴. As regards businesses, 36% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 65%) and 10% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 36%)⁵⁵. Furthermore, 36% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 32%)⁵⁶, while 52% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 31%)⁵⁷.

The level of perceived corruption is categorized as follows: low (the perception among experts and business executives of public sector corruption scores above 79); relatively low (scores between 79-60), relatively high (scores between 59-50), high (scores below 50).

The implementation of the 2021-2025 Anti-Corruption Action Plan continues in a timely and efficient manner. The implementation of the Anti-Corruption Action Plan 2021 – 2025⁵⁸ is being carried out according to schedule. In 2023, the main focus was on issues regarding conflicts of interest and lobbying⁵⁹ and the anti-corruption network⁶⁰, including governmental and civil society representatives, met five times⁶¹. The report on the monitoring of the implementation of the 2021-2025 Anti-Corruption Action Plan will be published at the end of 2024⁶². So far one of the potential issues has been the limited focus of investigations on the private sector⁶³ which is expected to be addressed through an increase of funds in relation to the police capacity to investigate corruption in the private sphere (estimated cost of EUR 1,500,000) and establishing procedural and analytical capacity in the Prosecutor's Office (e.g. recruiting auditors, support staff)⁶⁴.

Legislative efforts are ongoing to improve the investigation and prosecution of financial crimes, including corruption. The draft amendments to the Anti-Corruption Act⁶⁵ were submitted to the Parliament in May 2024⁶⁶. In 2023, the Ministry of Interior established a working group⁶⁷ to improve the effectiveness of investigation and prosecution of financial crimes, including corruption. It is tasked with preparing legislative and organisational reforms (including on staff training and funding). The working group will submit a report to the Government in the course of 2024 summarising its conclusions⁶⁸. the prevention of corruption, is expected to be sent to the ministries for coordination in 2024⁷⁰.

The investigation and prosecution of corruption cases is carried out efficiently. In 2023, there were 34 corruption cases under pre-court investigation⁷¹, nine cases were sent to court⁷², six cases were adjudicated and three were terminated on expediency⁷³. Currently, the Prosecutor's Office⁷⁴ is investigating three corruption offences all of which concern bribery⁷⁵. There are currently no ongoing cases on foreign bribery. As regards cooperation with the EPPO, no cases on corruption offences were investigated in 2023⁷⁶. Estonia currently has three delegated prosecutors while the expectation is to have at least one more⁷⁷.

Investigations regarding high-level corruption are still ongoing. Some high-level corruption cases are currently ongoing⁷⁸, including proceedings against a former Minister⁷⁹. In the Porto Franco No. 1 case, the Centre Party and its former secretary general were convicted by the Appellate Court for influence peddling after the Appellate Court overturned the acquittal decision by the court of first instance⁸⁰. In the Porto Franco bribery case No 2, another trial is currently ongoing in the court of first instance involving the former advisor of the minister of finance⁸¹. In the case of the Port of Tallinn, the court of first instance acquitted the defendants since it was found to be a private sector bribery case, which as the statute of limitation had expired⁸².

Some further progress has been made as the guidelines on conflicts of interest are being implemented successfully, but there are currently no plans to introduce a related enforcement mechanism. mechanism'⁸³. As mentioned in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, to further strengthen the guidelines for conflict of interest⁸⁴, Estonia introduced new procedures, including setting up the anti-corruption contact points (to support ministers and their advisors in getting acquainted with the relevant rules)⁸⁵. In 2023, the compulsory e-training and the raising of awareness among ministers and political advisers were increasingly widespread in practice, compared to previous years⁸⁶. The authorities continued to reward the best performing public services⁸⁷, with the title of transparent policy maker⁸⁸. Civil society created guidelines of good practice in transparent advocacy⁸⁹. An e-learning course “Prevention of Corruption and Conflict of Interest in the Public Sector” was made available for public servants⁹⁰. The authorities put a strong focus on prevention and the new procedures aiming at raising awareness of rules in place are being implemented⁹¹. The authorities raised the specificity of this system which is based on soft law and includes close monitoring that leads to detecting potential breaches which are, whenever needed, addressed by the criminal law rules. The Government considered that there is no need to introduce any separate tailor-made enforcement mechanism, as the system has proven to be efficient. According to the Government, such a mechanism would not fit the current set-up and it would not have any added value⁹². Some further progress has been made in view of the 2023 Rule of Law Report recommendation, as measures have been adopted to contribute to the efficient implementation of the current guidelines without a tailor-made enforcement mechanism.

Digital tools are being developed and deployed to ensure a better implementation of the existing rules on integrity. A digital tool developed to enhance the verification of asset declarations is expected to be operational in 2025⁹³. Another e-tool was developed to assess the risks of corruption in the private sector⁹⁴. Furthermore, civil society launched an online tool (‘Integrity Watch 3.0’) that aims at integrating information from the State Procurement Register, e-Business Register data, and income and receipts reports of political parties⁹⁵. Also, an e-learning tool for universities was developed in relation to business corruption, economic crimes, and business ethics⁹⁶. In 2023, the Ministry of Education and Research adopted detailed Guidelines for the prevention of corruption in educational institutions⁹⁷. This was accompanied by raising public awareness and education where 2 000 high school students were trained in 50 schools over the last six years in the framework of focused courses on anti-corruption⁹⁸.

The guidelines on lobbying for the Government continue being implemented with success and discussions were initiated on introducing lobbying rules in Parliament. In 2023, the rules regarding lobbying⁹⁹ continued to be promoted and actively monitored by the competent authorities. The analysis of information from the ministries, analysing the quality of conduct and updating the ranking of the best performers continues to be carried out quarterly¹⁰⁰. The Ministry of Justice and Transparency of Estonia analysed¹⁰¹ the data on disclosed lobbying meetings and launched the ranking of the ten best-performers in December 2023¹⁰². In line with the GRECO recommendation¹⁰³, political groups started discussions on possible guidelines on lobbying also for Parliament¹⁰⁴.

Rules on revolving doors are being implemented and additional guidance in this regard is expected in 2024. While the amendment¹⁰⁵ concerning post-employment rules for members of Government and introducing a cooling off period of six months is being implemented¹⁰⁶, specific guidelines on revolving doors together with possible instructions on how to mitigate the risks currently being developed by the Public Ethical Council are expected in 2024¹⁰⁷. In parallel, cases of persons moving between political office and private companies have been reported¹⁰⁸ which calls for ensuring efficiency of the implementation of the rules in place.

establishment of an electronic whistleblower reporting channel¹¹¹. The new draft law¹¹² presented to the Parliament on 11 September 2023 was adopted on 15 May 2024 and it will enter into force on 1 September 2024¹¹³. The material scope of the current proposal is limited to granting protection to persons who report information on breaches relating to the areas of EU law listed in the Whistleblowing Protection Directive and acquired through their work-related context; whereas the previous draft law extended the protection also to whistleblowers who reported violations of the national legislation¹¹⁴.

Strengthening the political party financing framework is a priority for the government.

The financing of the political parties and contacts between the private sector and policy-makers remain important topics¹¹⁵. Despite the long-standing recommendations of the Political Parties Financing Surveillance Committee, there has been no modification of the current rules on the basis of which illegal donations are returned to the donor instead of being redirected into the State budget¹¹⁶. The draft law on extending the investigating powers of the Committee through a legal basis for requesting documents, information and explanations from third parties, which was planned by mid-2023¹¹⁷, is a priority of the current government¹¹⁸. Among other elements, this is also expected to ensure a reduction in funding from the State budget for political parties that have been caught in violation of the rules in place¹¹⁹.

The Government has identified a number of areas as being at high risk of corruption.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

In Estonia, the freedom of expression finds legal protection in the Constitution¹²⁴. Secondary legislation expressly ensures the right of journalists to protect their sources, fosters media freedom in the radio and television sector¹²⁵ and provides safeguards for the independence of the public service broadcaster¹²⁶. The right to information is explicitly recognised in the Constitution, in the Public Information Act¹²⁷ and in the Personal Data Protection Act¹²⁸.

The independence of the national regulatory authority has remained stable while the Government is examining possible legislative amendments. Despite its relatively small size and limited resources, the national regulatory authority – the Consumer Protection and Technical Regulatory Authority - states that it has been able to successfully contribute to the work of the European Regulators Group for Audiovisual Media Services (ERGA)¹²⁹. As reported in the 2023 Rule of Law report, it has been granted additional staff and better technical tools to monitor the content of media services¹³⁰ with additional resources possibly still to be added in the future¹³¹. The MPM 2024 continues to report a low risk with regard to the independence and effectiveness of the media authority¹³². At the same time, the Ministry of Culture has gathered views regarding possible changes to the media legislation that could affect the work of the media regulator¹³³. In particular, to prevent the dissemination and distribution of information that poses a security threat, the regulatory authority could be given more powers to fine entities for retransmitting content from Russian television¹³⁴. Additionally, new rules are expected to be proposed, making the licensing procedure - managed by the media regulator - easier for radio broadcasters in Estonia¹³⁵. While the media market is highly concentrated, Estonian law does not provide for specific rules to control it on top of general competition law¹³⁶. The plurality of media providers is deemed by the MPM 2024 to carry a high risk¹³⁷. Information about the ownership of broadcasting companies, including beneficial owners, is guaranteed by law. While information on owners and ultimate beneficial owners of all types of media companies is widely available, the accuracy of information has been suspected in a couple of cases¹³⁸. The MPM 2024 considers the transparency of media ownership to carry a medium risk largely due to insufficient media-specific legislation¹³⁹.

A legislative reform concerning the public service media is being prepared. To strengthen the independence of the public service media, the Government has been preparing a reform of the relevant legislative framework, the Public Broadcasting Act. It has been assisted by an expert working group comprised of the public service media, private media companies and academics. A new legislative proposal is being prepared¹⁴⁰, to be followed by a public consultation. One of the key points would be guaranteeing better financial stability of the public service media¹⁴¹. At the moment, the public service media continues to express concerns about its long-term sustainability to produce public service content¹⁴², a situation acknowledged as problematic by other stakeholders¹⁴³ and exacerbated by a high inflation rate¹⁴⁴. The future legislative reform would also address the composition of the Public Broadcasting Council, which is responsible for appointing and dismissing members of the Management Board of the public service media and currently comprises six members of the Parliament in addition to four external experts¹⁴⁵. Although, in practice, no particular issues have been identified until now¹⁴⁶, this reform could help limit any potential risks linked to political influence over the public service media regarding the appointment and funding processes, generally identified as constituting a high risk to the independence of the public service media by the MPM 2024.

Some further progress has been made, concerning the right of access to information, as the government is preparing an analysis regarding the Public Information Act and has made public information with unrestricted access proactively available online. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended Estonia to ‘[e]nsure consistent and effective practical implementation of the right of access to information taking into account European standards on access to official documents’¹⁴⁷. Following an independent study procured by the Parliament which identified key problems related to access to public information¹⁴⁸, the Ministry of Justice is preparing an analysis regarding the Public Information Act based on proposals for better implementation of the legislation from a specifically formed working group¹⁴⁹. Public information with unrestricted access held by public authorities has also been proactively made available in a machine-readable format through a new open data portal¹⁵⁰. In the meanwhile, stakeholders continue to flag that the rules and practices for the release of information vary amongst authorities¹⁵¹. There has been a call for an organisation to secure transparency of public information¹⁵². The MPM 2024 maintains a medium risk with regard to the protection of right to information, although it has been reduced over the past two years¹⁵³. Thus, some further progress has been made on the recommendation made in the previous years.

The framework for the protection of Estonian journalists remains stable while possible legal actions by politicians and business owners have been referred to as a growing risk. The MPM 2024 deems the legal protection of freedom of expression in the Constitution to be robust and to enjoy good implementation in practice¹⁵⁴. It finds a low and reduced risk regarding the protection of freedom of expression compared to the previous year¹⁵⁵. Since the 2023 Rule of Law report, no new alerts for Estonia have been published on the Council of Europe’s Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists¹⁵⁶, and one alert was registered on the Mapping Media Freedom platform¹⁵⁷. The situation regarding the protection of journalists has remained stable. However, possible legal actions by

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Estonia is a parliamentary republic with a single-chamber Parliament. Estonia does not have a Constitutional court but the Supreme Court's Constitutional Review Chamber can carry out ex post constitutional review, including, under certain conditions, based on a constitutional complaint¹⁵⁹. In addition to the justice system, the Office of the Chancellor for Justice (the ombudsperson), which is the National Human Rights Institution, and the Gender Equality and Equal Treatment Commissioner¹⁶⁰ play a role¹⁶¹ in the system of checks and balances. Involvement of the public and stakeholders in public affairs is supported by advanced Information and Communication Technology tools.

Frequent use of procedures allowing for substantial delays to the legislative process in Parliament have triggered a reaction, resulting in the Government using the accelerated legislative workflows more often. Stakeholders have reported that during the reporting period, the legislative process in Parliament has been held up due to the possibility to table a significant number of amendments¹⁶² to every draft law, which delays the adoption process¹⁶³. The Government has been making more frequent use of a constitutional provision which allows it to align the vote on a specific law with a confidence vote¹⁶⁴. This procedure aims at speeding up the legislative process by avoiding certain procedural steps¹⁶⁵. This includes the shortening or even completely removing the public consultation process and the involvement of stakeholders in the decision-making process¹⁶⁶. The current situation has the consequence of restricting an inclusive public debate and the evidence-informed policy-making which is important for the system of checks and balances.¹⁶⁷.

A draft reform envisages more financial autonomy for the Chancellor of Justice, who remains actively engaged in upholding the rule of law. The Chancellor of Justice, which is the National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) has an A-status accreditation¹⁶⁸. In February 2024, the Government prepared a draft law to improve the financial autonomy of the Chancellor of Justice and of the National Audit Office¹⁶⁹. Currently, the budget of these institutions is established by submission of a request to the Ministry of Finance, following which it is discussed and approved by the Government, and then reaches Parliament for a final deliberation and vote. The draft reform envisages direct access for the Chancellor of Justice and the National Audit Office to Parliament when discussing their budgets, removing the role of the executive in that respect¹⁷⁰. The Chancellor of Justice continues to have an A-status accreditation from GANHRI¹⁷¹ and continues to play an active role in upholding the rule of law. In 2023, the Chancellor of Justice made 22 proposals to bring legislation in conformity with the Constitution¹⁷², and provided 13 opinions during ongoing constitutional review proceedings¹⁷³. The Chancellor did not find a reason to initiate disciplinary proceedings in respect of a judge in any of the cases it has reviewed¹⁷⁴.

¹⁷² For 15 proposals there was a follow-up by Parliament, while for seven there has been no feedback. Information received from the Chancellor of Justice in the context of the country visit to Estonia.

pending implementation was 1 year and 5 months (compared to 11 months in 2023)¹⁷⁶. As regards the respect of payment deadlines, on 31 December 2023 there were no cases awaiting confirmation of payments (the same as in 2022)¹⁷⁷. On 1 July 2024, the number of leading judgments pending implementation had increased to five¹⁷⁸.

The practice of allocating funding to civil society organisations (CSOs) through Parliament without concrete criteria has been discontinued. The civic space in Estonia is considered to be open¹⁷⁹. To further strengthen it, the ruling coalition discontinued the practice of using a state budget line where members of Parliament can distribute grants to CSOs, without clear criteria or evaluation procedures. While for the 2023 budget, 478 entities were awarded a grant¹⁸⁰, the 2024 budget did not include any such grant to CSOs¹⁸¹.

¹⁷⁶ All figures are calculated by the European Implementation Network and are based on the number of cases that are considered pending at the annual cut-off date of 1 January 2024. See the Contribution from the European Implementation Network for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 3.
